

CORIAN PATCH- WORK PROJECT

McDonald's, Northern VA

Challenge: Certain number of McDonald's properties in our community upgraded their point of sales system (called Dual Point). This upgrade resulted in exposing between 1 to 3 holes on the customer countertops.

McDonald's selected only qualify contractors in Virginia and Maryland to identify, schedule and repair these expose holes on the Corian countertops.

Solution: Our repair team was dispatched to several McDonald's properties in the Northern Virginia including Reston, Lynchburg, Fairfax, Manassas, and Alexandria; Our technicians arrived on time and contacted RepairCare to check in & out when the jobs were signed and completed.

Location: Northern VA

Corian is a man-made material created by DuPont scientists in 1967. Its primary use is as a countertop/benchttop surface, though it has many other applications. Knowledge and experience cutting and handling this material was important to be considered for this repair project.

Commercial 1 Services was one of the few selected qualified contractors thanks to our commercial repairs experience and local reputation.

Coordinating with the store manager and trying to reduce the amount of time disrupted services was a top priority. For this reason, most of these repairs were scheduled and concluded late at night. McDonald's staff closed the restaurant for repairs that took place between 2 to 3 hours.

Upon arrival our technicians covered important equipment in the counter area; This help reduce the clean-up time upon completion. Our team made the proper cut-outs about 2.25" using a whole saw, model over the hole, then sanded down the edges at a 45-degree angle. Once fit, it was glued and sanded down again using a fine sanding paper to even the surface out.
